

Tesoro Chooses Industrial Evolution's Web*Technician™ Service to Share Data from its Hawaiian Oil Refinery

Kalaeloa Cogeneration Plant to Receive Real-Time Data Feed

PHOENIX, ARIZONA, April 9, 2008 — Industrial Evolution is pleased to announce today that Tesoro has chosen Industrial Evolution's Web*Technician service as a means of sharing operating data from its Hawaiian oil refinery with the Kalaeloa Cogeneration Plant.

Kalaeloa is a 209 megawatt combined-cycle cogeneration plant located 48 kilometers from downtown Honolulu, the state capital and the economic center of Hawaii, on the island of Oahu. It is owned by PSEG Global and Harbert Power. The facility sells all of its electric power to the island utility, Hawaiian Electric Company, and supplies steam to Tesoro Hawaii.

Web*Technician is a service provided by Industrial Evolution, whereby real-time operating data from the refinery's real-time historian (in this case, "PI" from OSIsoft) stored in a database behind the Tesoro firewall is relocated in Industrial Evolution's own data center from where it is presented to Kalaeloa via a secure web site.

"Industrial Evolution had piloted Web*Technician with Tesoro in the past," remarked Simon Wright, CEO of Industrial Evolution, "So when the need to share data with Kalaeloa arose, it was a proven and approved solution for Tesoro"

Through use of Web*Technician, Kalaeloa is better able to anticipate Tesoro's need for steam production, making it cogeneration strategy more efficient.

"Industrial Evolution is very pleased to have taken the pilot work with Tesoro into a production environment with Kalaeloa," added Mr. Wright. "We are delighted to have been chosen by Tesoro for this application."
